Her Mother who came from the East Boldre area had a holiday home that they frequented during weekends and summer holidays away from Epsom, Surrey. She also spent a few weeks at Woodfalls near Salisbury on a cousin's farm at the start of the war. Two shops in East Boldre are mentioned – Symes (A general store which sold sweets) and Mathews Bakery. At the outbreak of War ANO001 remembers her father burying fuel cans in the gardens at Epsom and East Boldre for use in their car. Bomb shelters, RAF Beaulieu, and rationing are briefly mentioned.

Although he didn't like to talk about his experiences, Steve says that his father found his way somehow to the POW camp in Setley. He met Steve's mother on a bus and was able to stay in England by becoming a volunteer with bomb disposal. He remembers his mother telling some humorous stories about her work in the Transport Corps.

After returning from Dunkirk in May 1940 and being sent initially to Aldershot, the Recovery Sections of No. 8 Army Field Workshop, RAOC, were despatched to various locations around Burley, including the Village Hall and Woods Corner, then to Testwood School in Totton. After each group was reassembled correctly, No. 2 Section was billeted at Allum Green House. They used the Imperial Garage (now the Meriden Modena Ferrari showroom) in Lyndhurst as their work base repairing and refurbishing damaged vehicles. No. 1 Section moved to Petersfield and No. 3 to Bishops Waltham. At about 11.15pm on 5 September 1940 there was an air raid, during which many large bombs fell around the house - the craters are still visible - and one went through the roof and the upper floor, where the officers were sleeping, and detonated in the cellar which was the Sergeants' Mess. Jill's father, Staff Sgt Stanley Henry Avon, and three others were killed. They were Sgt Alfred W. Blunn, Staff Sgt Edgar W.E. Gifford and WOII (SQMS) Harry S. Tyler. 'I was only seven weeks old, and on the evening of 5 September my father posted a letter to my mother to say he had found someone who might help find a place locally for my mother and me to come and stay in order to be near him.' (Jill Avon) There are two photos of the damage to Allum Green House. These were taken by Sgt Reg Shuker of No. 2 Section on the morning after the air raid. Photos courtesy of Sgt Reg Shuker's daughter Tina from Canada.

At the time he was 20 years of age and they were stationed in Burley in June 1940. The army needed to rebuild its forces following the withdrawal at Dunkirk. Their main task whilst at Burley was to man slit trenches guarding the village. Wilf describes one or two incidents during their stay there before moving to Testwood, and mentions the German bomb that dropped on Allum Green.

John Martin	28/12/2013							http://www.newforesttw2.org/the-memories-of-growing-up-at-hornfield-farm-fritham/	Memories of growing up at Hornfield Farm, Fritham	Edwina Bright was born in 1935 and brought up in Fritham, living on their family farm throughout the war. She describes the daily routine of rounding up the cows that were allowed to roam out on the Forest and selling and distributing the milk. They kept pigs and chickens and ran ponies on the open Forest. They also grew their own vegetables, so the family did not go short of food during the war. Edwina goes on to recall the siting of ack-ack guns and searchlights in the area and the Canadian lumberjacks that came over to build the log cabins and other accommodation for personnel on Stoney Cross airfield. They had evacuees from Southampton staying with them during the war and she remembers the children attending school with her in Bramshaw, where they observed tanks and lorries passing the school. She describes what school was like in those days and seeing the Italian POWs going to the sawmill at Stoden and recalls the Ashley Walk bombing range and Millersford. A stray bomb was dropped not far from their farm and caused considerable damage to properties in Fritham. Edwina remembers the build-up of troops prior to D-Day. As children they found the activities on Stoney Cross airfield quite fascinating and recalls much of what she saw at the time. She gives a good description of local life during that period and how they dealt with rationing and the black market.

They recall going to the cinema and later on to the various dance halls they attended and dancing with the troops. They recount the effects of rationing not only on food but also the materials available for making dresses to go to the dances, and life in general just after the war.

Whilst he was there, a Spitfire shot down a German bomber over the school. The Royal Engineers set up a searchlight installation in the field next to his home. He saw the bomber that bombed the New Milton crossroads where many Royal Fusiliers were killed. As kids, they used to cycle over to Holmsley air field to watch the bombers and gliders taking off. Two large bombs were dropped close to their house. He mentions the build-up of tanks in the Lymington area prior to D-Day, and also witnessed a couple of crashed aircraft.

Her father had a reserved occupation, because he was a carpenter and for some of the time he worked in the shipyard, by the marina, and he worked on Motor Torpedo Boats. Later on he worked at Beaulieu when they were laying the track and the airstrip for the airfield there. Her father probably cycled to the shipyard, but she remembers that they had a little Austin 7 car and that at weekends they would drive out to East Boldre. Also on Sundays, he would drive them to Hythe or Calshot to watch the flying boats coming and going. Being so young at the time she has little memory of rationing, but does remember her mother preserving eggs in galvanised buckets full of a jelly like substance. As for war activities, she remembers the search lights, the air raid siren and witnessing an aerial dogfight. She was staying down in Paignton for the VE Day celebrations.

Needless to say this was a great attraction to young boys and Denis describes some of the military activities there, including the crash of a Lightning aircraft. They observed the paratroopers practicing for D-Day. As boys, they also made contact with the American troops and also the Italian and German prisoners-of-war. On Battle of Britain Day (15th of September 1945) they attended an exhibition on the aerodrome.

The German man who he named became a member of the Home Guard and used to patrol with his father! He lived directly opp Shoot Wood camp and knew it, would like to show the project team around.		John Martin	04/04/2014					Geoffrey Carpenter was born in 1937 and was a young lad living in Burley during the war. He recalls the shops in Burley at that time and then the build-up of British and American troops in preparation for D-Day, including where they were billeted around the area. He also mentions the tanks lined up in Beechwood, and the Canadians who gave all the children in the village a Christmas party. That was a treat as he recalls how as a result of rationing his father had to grow vegetables and that they kept a couple of pigs. They had a couple of landgirls staying with them, working on the farm. He also mentions places where the Forest was ploughed up to grow wheat, barley and potatoes. They could hear the aircraft coming and going from Holmsley airfield and paid a visit there after the war. His father worked at Linford House which was converted into a Military hospital for the duration of the war. During the school holidays, Geoffrey used to go with his uncle who had a lorry, delivering pitprops to the railway station at Holmsley. Most local men that weren't in the forces either worked in forestry or had to go into Lymington, working at Wellworthy.

The family had to evacuate the farm during the harvest in 1940 when much of the land was used to construct Ibsley aerodrome. The family moved to Dorset and she then went to school in Bournemouth. She remembers the buses towing a gas generator behind them and how underpowered they were. She describes the construction of Ibsley aerodrome, the constant noise of aircraft coming and going and some of the incidents that took place there. Cynthia describes what it was like to work on a farm during the war and the effect of food rationing. She also observed military activities during the build-up to D-Day, was horrified by the piles of rubble on a visit to London, and saw the bombing damage in Bournemouth. After the aerodrome was demolished and the concrete runways removed, her father found a Stone Age axe head whilst deep ploughing the land.

He was working as a machine operator at Wellworthy Engineering before he was called up in April 1944 and he went into the RAF. After his initial training, he was part of the Motor Boat Crew who were employed on Air Sea Rescue and also on Sunderland Flying Boat bases and was consequently stationed at Calshot. He was stationed there from June 1945 until he was demobbed in 1947. Calshot was a permanent RAF base and from the early days they had always operated flying boats from there. Mr Denness mentions the difficulties of transport during the war due to petrol rationing and the limited bus services in the area. He also describes some of the primitive living conditions they had to endure living out in the rural area of East End, the blackout and bombing raids. He describes his time working as a machinist at Wellworthy's.

When this became a "hotbed" of military activity, her parents decided to send her and her baby brother to live with her maternal grandparents in Brockenhurst. They enjoyed Brockenhurst with the New Forest ponies and pigs and the famous Water Splash but that was all to come to an end when a bomb dropped on the bungalow, nearly destroying it. Luckily Sally and her brother (and the nanny) were not at home but her mother decided that if the bombing could happen in a place like Brockenhurst, they may as well all be together back in Warsash! It was here that the ground floor of their house was occupied by British soldiers and she remembers seeing the landing craft and soldiers departing on the Hamble River for D-Day.

Hugo was then called up and joined the Fleet Air Arm in January 1942. Following a period of training in Scotland he was posted to the Testwood Training Squadron, Southampton. This enabled him to visit his family home near Lymington and was able to observe what was happening in the Forest during the war and its effect on the local estates and population. His narrative provides a window on what it was like to live in this area during the war years and its aftermath.

Only trades people and doctors had cars, the rest had to go where they could by bicycle. Walter describes the preparation of the Beaulieu river for war by the removal of all boats and moorings. He attended the village school and left when aged 14 to become a messenger delivering messages between the various posts around the village and later joined the Fire Brigade. He worked as a gardener, including at Palace House in Beaulieu, and mentions how they coped with rationing, and how they grew their own vegetables and fruit. A couple of bombs dropped near the village and he remembers the build-up to D-Day. Walter provides a comprehensive description of military action around the Beaulieu area at that time.

Living eight miles out of Southampton he recalls his childhood as rather idyllic, though he often witnessed the passage of German bombers over Southampton and the blitz which followed. He remembers the build up of troops in the forest prior to D-Day and recalls with great clarity and fondness that both he and his cousin were taken up in a P 38 Lightning by a friendly American airman. In his later years he founded and was Editor of a Parish magazine called Stanley's Own in which he reported the story of Keith Payne, a survivor of the bombings at a cafe in Copythorne on the 26th November 1940.

John Martin	10/05/2014							Keith Gerard was born in London just before the beginning of the Second World War and moved with his parents to live in Milford on Sea. His father worked on the development of the Merlyn engine that powered the Spitfire and Mosquito fighter planes and the Lancaster bombers. This meant that his father was away from home a lot during the war. He also served in the local Home Guard. Keith recalls one or two stories of his father's time in the Home Guard. One of his earliest memories was of a German sea mine being dropped close to their house. It was discovered one morning hanging from a parachute caught in a tree at the bottom of their back garden. It took the Royal Navy some time to dismantle the mine and the family had to be evacuated. Keith recalls that they did not have air raid shelters in their gardens as in other places, but relied either on the communal air raid shelter in the centre of the village or if at home, they took shelter under the dining room table. However, relatives over the road did have an Anderson shelter in their garden. He clearly remembers the effects of rationing, both food and clothing. His parents gave him their egg rations. Pets had to make do on scraps left over from family meals. He also recalls his days at the Milton on Sea Church of England School where they learnt to fear the Germans. He recalls the pleasures of school meals. Apparently they all hated semolina! The local farmer grew vegetables in a large field and Keith thought it rather strange that they always seemed to have the same vegetables as those growing in the farmer's field. As children, they were denied access to the beach, which was heavily fortified with barbed wire and scaffolding as part of the coastal defences. Keith remembers German aircraft passing overhead on bombing raids, especially on Southampton. For a short time during the war the children were asked to collect unwanted paper and books, which was recorded against their names. As recognition of their efforts, they were awarded paper badges corresponding to the ranks in the army and in accordance with the amount that they had collected. Keith notes that he reached the rank of General but was beaten by a boy who reached Field Marshal. A troop of Royal Engineers were stationed at Lymore, just to the north of Milford, and as children, they collected books that were no longer wanted by residents and passed them on to the troops to give them something to read. It was all part of the build up to D-day, and Keith recounts how suddenly they had all gone. At the end of the war he remembers the VE celebrations with parties and sports days. Where the women obtained the food was a marvel, as things were still rationed and in short supply and that lasted for several years after the war had ended.

Ian left school at 16 to work for the Daily Telegraph's Manchester office as a copy boy before moving on to a local newspaper, where he also spent two years volunteering in the Home Guard. Ian was called up a week after his 18th birthday to fight in WWII and opted to join the Navy. A medical examination showed he was colour blind so roles were limited, but Ian decided to become a coder on the Navy's recommendation. Following his training, Ian was assigned to Combined Operations Unit, Group 1, Force J based at Exbury and was part of the D-Day landings on board HMS Lawford, leaving Cowes Roads for Juno Beach at 9pm on the 4th June 1944 to assist with the invasion. After HMS Lawford was sunk by the enemy two days following, Ian was later assigned to HMS Waveney at Lepe Hard and back patrolling the anchorage.

John Martin	09/03/2014						Walter Green was born in 1933 and in 1939 his father joined the Forestry Commission and they moved to Holidays Hill cottage (now the reptilary) just off the A35 south of Lyndhurst. He recalls the searchlight unit stationed nearby and walking through the camp on the way to school. The facility was bombed and machine gunned on one occasion, but they survived. He also witnessed the damage following the bombing of Alum Green House, which they had to pass on the way to school. He also remembers the Italian POWs from the camp at Setley working at the local sawmill. His father was employed in the planting of trees and Walter remembers people bringing sacks of acorns and beech nuts for planting in the nursery at Burley Lodge. They had Canadian troops camping in the Forest during the build-up to D-Day and he recalls the American convoys passing along the A35 towards Lymington. Walter went to school in Emery Down and then Lyndhurst and recalls his school days, the air raid shelters, evacuees and effects of the blackout, rationing and food supplies. After the war, he started work as an apprentice to a building firm and did maintenance work on Stoney Cross airfield, which was a buffer depot holding stocks of wheat and sugar. He remembers the hangars full of wheat and playing football on the roof. Also after the war they had large numbers of Scouts who camped out in the Forest and his father had to find work for them repairing fences and ditches.

John Martin	06/03/2014					Arthur Green was 12 years of age when war broke out and living in Portsmouth. He was evacuated to Brockenhurst and was billeted there for several years and describes what school was like, including their sports activities, and earning pocket money by doing odd jobs such as delivering milk and the newspapers. As children they used to cycle into Lymington and he recalls passing the Italian POW camp at Setley. Arthur remembers incendiary bombs being dropped on Brockenhurst and the lads collecting the fins from the burnt out bombs and any other shrapnel. Also seeing the glow in the sky when Southampton was bombed. Whilst cycling around the local area, he remembers seeing the build-up of troops and military equipment in readiness for D-Day. He returned to Portsmouth in 1942 to take up an apprenticeship to become an engine fitter. The family were up early on D-Day and he remembers the sudden disappearance of ships from the Solent and the continuous flight of aircraft going overhead.

At the start of the war he saw action in northern France and Belgium as part of the BEF, but following injury, he was evacuated from Dunkirk and taken to Shotley Bridge Hospital, Consett in County Durham to recover. On return to active service he joined another unit protecting the south coast between Bournemouth and Christchurch, finally being billeted in Sway and Piley, where he met his future wife. In 1941 he then joined the 77th Highland Field Regiment at Ibsley where he observed the making of the film 'First of the Few' starring David Niven. After a short spell stationed at Selkirk in Scotland during which time he got married, within months he was despatched to North Africa and was abroad for the next three years, seeing action in Italy, including the fighting at Monte Cassino, and ending his war service in Greece.

Aircraft dropped men, vehicles and weapons at East Boldre and then went and collected them before doing it all again. Based at Beaulieu Airfield for about 18 months in 1946/47 Fred also worked on early German rotary-wing aircraft (helicopters) that had been captured and brought over. In 1945 the first helicopter to cross the English Channel was the Focke-Achgelis Fa 223 on its way to RAF Beaulieu. Fred has good recall of the layout of the airfield as well as recollections about German prisoners-of-war and generally what a cold, miserable, muddy place it was. Arthur was 18 in 1938 and decided to join the Territorial Army. As an engineer, he joined the detachment of the Royal Army Ordnance Corp, and when war was declared his unit was mobilised and sent to France as part of the British Expeditionary Force. He was eventually evacuated from Dunkirk and on landing at Southampton, was billeted initially at Testwood School in Totton and then several places in the New Forest before ending up at Allum Green House in the middle of 1940. Having requisitioned a garage in Lyndhurst they kept themselves busy by doing basic running repairs on whatever vehicles they had available to them, trucks, Bren Gun carriers, etc. On 5th September 1940 the Allum Green House was bombed causing considerable damage and casualties. Arthur was working that night so avoided the bombing, but was recalled to assist with the damage. He was then billeted in Burley and eventually moved to Aldershot for some specific skills training and then later on in 1941 his unit was disbanded entirely and he joined the REME. Alan recalls his father's effort to get a memorial bench placed in the grounds of Allum Green House, dedicated to those that lost their lives that night. He mentions several of the families involved.

He was living with his parents at The Fighting Cocks, Godshill where his grandmother Mrs Grigg was the landlady. His father had a reserved occupation at Eling Wharf, Totton. The lounge bar at The Fighting Cocks was frequently used as an add-on officers' mess for the RAF staff involved with the Ashley Walk bombing range facility. As a young child Brian remembers the officers and civilians in the lounge bar for about two hours discussing the results of a bombing test and then when they had left, it all went back to normal again. He recalls the dropping of the experimental ten ton bomb followed by a gathering of senior top brass in the lounge bar, probably including Churchill and Eisenhower. As lads they ignored the warnings not to enter the bombing range and burrowed under the perimeter fence. On one occasion they were there as a bombing exercise started and had to make a rapid exit. Brian remembers the RAF buildings on the green at Godshill and recalls some of the activities there at that time. He recalls the light aircraft landing strip where the present cricket pitch is today. He also provides a detailed description of what it was like living in the pub in those days, the somewhat limited utility services and the water and food supplies. Brian also provides details of the build-up of troops and equipment prior to D-Day and what he saw during the night when they all left going down the road towards Fordingbridge. He goes on to recall what school was like and what Godshill was like after the war. Also the occupation of the Nissan huts and other buildings by families displaced as a result of the bombing of Southampton, including the huts on Stoney Cross airfield.

Having joined the army he volunteered to become a glider pilot, and after intensive training, he moved to Stoney Cross airfield in September 1943, serving in the No.3 Squadron, Glider Pilot Regiment. He was there for about six months and describes the Horsa gliders in some detail, including their operation, crew arrangement, a typical flight and the training exercises. He also mentions the names of staff serving in his squadron, where the accommodation was and the other people on the RAF station. Jim mentions the problems of Forest ponies on the airfield. He also talks about entertainment and the dances they attended. After Stoney Cross they first assembled at Brize Norton for more training whilst awaiting the assault at Arnhem.

His family occupied Goldenhayes, a country house and estate between Bartley and Woodlands. He relates his boyhood memories of his school days at this time, helping on the family farm and his encounters with local troops or whilst they were out riding their ponies or bikes. This includes the battery of light anti-aircraft guns that were bogged down on their land and an American jeep that ran into Matley Bog. He gives an account of what daily life was like for his family during the war years.

James Bruce Husband started the shipyard in the late 1920s, after moving his yacht building business from Teddington on Thames. The family was originally from Oakham in Rutlandshire. James Bruce had six sons and seven daughters. Peter, along with his brothers, followed the family tradition of working in the boat building industry. During WW2 the shipyard was commissioned by the Admiralty to build Motor Minesweepers and other naval vessels, and also to carry out essential repair work. Peter was not required to sign up for the forces as his work at the shipyard was vital to the war effort. Peter does not remember much about the bomb which fell on	Georgina Babey	14/06/2010							Peter's father was the founder of Husband's Shipyard in Marchwood. He was stationed briefly at Beaulieu airfield prior to being demobbed in December 1945. He does not remember much about his time at the airbase. Initially in 1939 he was posted to 924 Squadron who were responsible for setting up barrage balloons around Manchester. Early in 1940 the squadron were posted to Le Havre in France to support the defences there. On evacuation they were re-equipped and posted to Southampton. Dennis describes the construction of a barrage balloon and its deployment, and also their operations in the Southampton area. He witnessed a couple of aircraft crashes in the West End area. He also got married during the war and they used parachute material for dresses and shirts. On leaving the RAF he became a teacher and eventually taught retarded children.

She sang at camps throughout Hampshire and the New Forest, mostly on makeshift stages of carpet covered packing cases. Bungled into the back of army trucks, she and the band were often taken to secret camps with no names in the thicker parts of the forest. There she entertained Allied troops from America, Norway and France, as well as singing at private concerts for badly burnt troops recovering from plastic surgery at Marchwood Priory. Her most memorable evening though came in May 1945 when she was interrupted mid concert with the announcement that the war in Europe was over. The concert turned into a celebratory sing along. Brenda said: 'I think personally the best thing about the official celebrations which took place the following weekend was all the lights coming on again. When it's been completely dark for four years to see lights in the windows of houses and in the few remaining shops we had left after the Blitz and in the pubs, was super.

Whilst returning from abroad they stopped off in Gibraltar at the time war was declared and had to be evacuated from there at short notice when France was invaded. The boat they were on was supposed to land them at Portsmouth, but due to bombing, they eventually landed at Tibury in London. She remembers the effects of the blackout there before they travelled to stay with a grandmother in Wales where they spent the summer of 1940 before returning to Burley in the autumn of that year. Dionis provides quite a lot of detail regarding life in that part of the Forest during the war including their social activities, mixing with the troops and the blackout. She recalls the restriction of movement due to petrol rationing and her mother joining the Voluntary Aid Detachment. She also recalls the Forest being full of troops and tank manoeuvres and the build-up to D-Day. She remembers the trees being felled for timber (primarily by Italian POWs) and ploughing up the Forest to try to grow food and the long term affect it had on the areas involved. Like most people, they kept pigs and she recalls collecting pig swill and the black market in pig meat. Apparently there was a considerable reduction in the number of deer on the Forest as well! They had evacuees billeted on them and Dionis remembers food rationing and what they had to grow themselves, including preserving fruit and vegetables. She also mentions the collection of blood from the ponies in order to create the vital tetanus vaccine for the injured troops. From Burley they could see the bombing of Southampton and recalls bombs being dropped in the Forest. Dionis also mentions cycling during the blackout and the dangers of slit trenches hidden by the heather whilst out riding their ponies.

R-M01A1 - For the first time.mp3	http://www.newforesthistory.co.uk/holbury/	Memories of childhood in Holbury	Ronald Mintram was born in November 1934 and on his fifth birthday in 1939 he started school at Fawley Infant School. He recalls what it was like living through those times, what with the air raids and being in the air raid shelters, his school days, including the obligatory gasmask, the effects of food rationing and lack of transport to get about. They lived in Holbury and with the oil refinery and Southampton docks being close by, they were a prime target for the German bombing raids. He recalls bombs being dropped on Holbury, including one in a neighbouring garden. They saw dogfights overhead and one of their hobbies was collecting and swapping pieces of shrapnel. Just before his sixth birthday he was rushed into the Royal South Hants Hospital and recalls the tremendous air raid on Southampton on the 30th of November 1940. He mentions the story of the Norwegian pilots who stole a couple of German flying boats and flew them initially to Scotland and then on down to Southampton, only to be fired on by the local ack-ack defences as they approached the Solent to land near Hythe. He gives some details of the build-up of mainly American troops, jeeps, tanks and armoured vehicles in that area as part of the build-up to D-Day. Also what they managed to salvage when the troops had left for Normandy.

Before going off to boarding school she was free to cycle or ride her pony with others across the Forest and thus able to observe the military activities close to her home on the Cadland estate. This included operations at Fawley, Calshot and Lepe, including the preparatory work needed for the D-Day invasion. Like many others of her age, she recalls the air raids and bombing of Southampton, rationing and meeting American troops. Altogether a realistic account of what life was like for a youngster living in the New Forest during the war years.

Helen Wallbridge	28/02/2014								Alan Oakenfull was born in London in 1932 but by 1939 the family were living in Southampton. His mother had died a few years earlier and his father was about to be drafted into the army, so Alan and his siblings had to be evacuated. They were taken to the Central Station in Southampton, along with about 40 other children from the school, and a train took them to Lymington. Alan recalls that they weren't happy where they were billeted and after three months, they were moved to Bournemouth where things were no better and eventually after about a year they were moved to Wilverley Park House in Lyndhurst, which was for children from problem backgrounds. Alan describes what living in Lyndhurst was like at that time and recalls the French soldiers being billeted nearby following the evacuation from Dunkirk. Alan gained a scholarship to the Itchen Grammar School, which had been evacuated to Andover, so he then had to move there. He recalls the local Home Guard training and watching dogfights over the town. His father was invalided out of the army and settled in Lower Pennington, so in early 1943 he moved back to live with his father, who had joined the Home Guard and also become an ambulance driver. Alan was transferred to Brockenhurst County High School and describes school life and he also joined the Lymington Town Sailing Club, which provided an opportunity to observe the build-up of shipping in the Solent prior to D-Day.

He remembers the activities there and the build-up to D-Day, including the unloading of Sherman tanks. Their house was severely damaged at the start of the war during a bombing raid on the harbour area. He recalls some of the things that they did as lads, including collecting spent ammunition as trophies and scraping out the contents of dud incendiary bombs. He also mentions the crash of a Flying Fortress near the Monument and the crash of a German fighter plane on the mud flats. Eddie remembers a ship wreck off the Needles and boxes of oranges floating up the Lymington river, some of which they managed to salvage.

John Martin	02/04/2015	Sent to Rob Nash 13-4-15								Pamela Ricketts was born in 1929 and was a school child in Fordingbridge at the beginning of the war. She remembers visiting the prisoner-of-war camp along the Stockton road and the goose that guarded the entrance gate. Entertainment consisted of going to the local cinema and attending dances in the local Drill Hall. They had to take in a little girl evacuee from Southampton. Pamela remembers the nights in air raid shelters and the blackout. She recalls the noise created by convoys of troops and tanks passing along the main Salisbury road prior to D-Day. At the end of the war, she went to work in Salisbury.

He lived in Frogham and recalls the bomb testing done locally, both at Ashley Walk and Millersford, but no real detail. He was then conscripted into the RAF and sent out to the Far East, where he spent most of the war, only coming home on leave on one occasion when they were celebrating VE Day. He did join the ATC but has few war memories relating to the New Forest.

However, in 1942 they were moved to New Milton, close to the St George's Nursing Home. Whilst on guard duty there he met his future wife who was a nurse at the nursing home, and they were married in November 1943. Peter trained as a commando, but was then given the task of captaining a landing craft on D-Day. He doesn't remember much about that day as it was such a traumatic experience. The landing craft was lost along with his coxswain. On his return he was transferred to the Fleet Air Arm out in the Far East. On leaving the services, he joined the Metropolitan Police force and then retired to Milford-on-Sea.

She remembers many bombs falling on Pennington, mainly so that the Germans were not returning with the extra weight. She also had to 'fire watch' with buckets and stirrup pumps all through the war. Her husband worked hard on the land during the day and then was a member of the Home Guard in the evening.

John Martin	23/03/2015							Brian Stone was only 7 months old when the war started, so his memories of the war are rather limited to those of a young child at that time. They lived in the Buckland area of Lymington. He does recall seeing the tanks and trucks parked in Lymington prior to D-Day and the Americans throwing them sweets as they drove round the town. His father was away during the war, ending up in Germany. His mother received letters saying that he was missing, presumed killed and this caused her much distress. When he returned home, his father was reluctant to tell them of his time away. Brian recalls the Americans allowing the kids to play on the tanks, which is when he met his first coloured person.

In 1942 she volunteered to join the Women's Air Force. The first time she returned home in uniform, her mother didn't recognise her. Before joining the forces she was a packer in a local nursery, so that was considered a good training for her to become a parachute packer for the paratroops. She recalls her job experience and village life at the time, including going to local dances in Sway and at Brockenhurst. Whilst serving at the RAF station at Penrhos, North Wales, she witnessed a horrible aeroplane crash, and when unravelling the parachutes, discovered an incendiary bomb. Francis mentions some of the big houses that were taken over by the troops and the damage they did. Apparently the ponies and cows used to get into people's gardens and wreak havoc in the vegetable patch. She briefly mentions rationing, collecting acorns for pig feed and the Sway sawmill.

Initially she was based in Brockenhurst and later moved on to Lyndhurst. Her task was to follow the teams cutting timber and to measure the timber that had been cut ready for shipment elsewhere. She also spent some time at the sawmill offices recording production figures and where the timber went.

She was attached to the 1st Company, 3 Command Signals, Auxiliary Territorial Services (ATS). Her role for much of the war was as a spotter on the gun emplacements searching the skies for signs of enemy aircraft, based mainly at Marchwood and Lime Kiln Lane, Holbury. Pat remembered her time in the army as a time of excitement, being a young girl and away from home for the first time. Her most vivid memory was of the night she was on duty and saw a German plane shot down near Holbury. She recalls watching the plane fall from the sky and cheering when they saw the crew parachute out. Pleased to have destroyed the plane, but relieved not to have caused loss of life.

John Martin	27/02/2015							Michael Webster was born in 1934, and in the same year moved to Rushington Lane, Totton. Following the evacuation at Dunkirk, the children had a week off school because the building was required to house the French soldiers. He relates how he went away to visit his grandmother in 1944 and on his return, the local fields had become an encampment for 5,000 American troops. He recalls the activity when the troops were leaving on D-Day. He describes parts of old Totton and an air raid on the timber yard in Eling Lane. At the end of the war he visited a captured German U-boat in Southampton docks.

His father having taken the tenancy of the 240 acre mixed farm in October 1934. At the start of the war Stephen was only five years old and it is a little difficult to remember specific events but some he can still remember, things like the bombing of Cowes on the Isle of Wight, seeing the glow in the sky from the fires and going down into the shelter in the garden which used to flood so it wasn't very comfortable. Stephen recalls a working farm through a difficult time with other memories of what was going on around him, and for a little boy all rather exting.
